1.0 FOREWORD

William Pitcher College, the oldest government teacher training institution in the country, is the home of training teachers for schools. Located, about two kilometres from Manzini, the hub of Eswatini, the college is easily accessible from all corners of the country. For a student who seeks quality teacher training programmes, William Pitcher College is the name to keep in mind.

The college offers Primary and Secondary teachers' diploma programmes. The programmes take three years to complete. William Pitcher College is affiliated to the University of Eswatini and all its programmes are moderated and approved by the university. Hence, it is the University of Eswatini that awards the diplomas to the graduates of the college.

The purpose of this document is to provide information to prospective students who would like to be admitted to train to be secondary school teachers. Please note that the information contained in this leaflet was correct at the time of publishing but may be changed without notice.

Principal

Our Vision

To be a leading regional tertiary education institution through teaching, research and community service

Our Mission

A leading educational institution providing access to quality, relevant, affordable, pre-service, in-service, part-time/distance, undergraduate and graduate learning experiences through teaching, research and innovation; engage in community partnership responding to opportunities and demands to advance excellence, diversity, equity, quality of life nationally, regionally and internationally

2.0 HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

William Pitcher College developed from the Government Teacher Training Centre which was established in 1953 and shared the same premises with the Swazi National School in Matsapha. In 1958, a desire for a bigger teacher training institution resulted in the relocation of the training centre to Manzini. In August 1962, a Teacher Training College was officially opened in Manzini by Sir John Maud C.C.B., C.B.E. in the present William Pitcher College location. In October 1963, the College was renamed William Pitcher College in honour and memory of the late William Pitcher ESQ, OBE, who was the director of education from 1951 to 1962.

Initially, the College offered T4 (Primary Lower) and T3 (Primary Higher) programmes. After the country's national Independence in 1968, there was a dire need for Secondary School education, hence the establishment of new public schools and expansion of already operating ones. To cater for the demand of teachers, a two year Secondary Teacher's Certificate (STC) programme began in 1970 while the T4 and T3 programmes were revised and replaced with the two year Primary Teachers Certificate (PTC) programme. In 1986, the Primary and Secondary Teachers Certificate programmes were phased out and replaced with three (3) year Diploma programmes.

In 1975, the College had started offering a one-year In-service Home Economics Course for serving Primary School Teachers. However, this programme was phased out in 2005 since the Home Economics component was already part of the Primary Teachers Diploma programme.

In the 1980's the country experienced a shortage of Junior Secondary School teachers hence the need to train more Secondary School Teachers. The Primary Teachers Diploma programme (PTD) was then phased out in order to increase intake for the Secondary Teachers Diploma programme. The last crop of the Primary Teachers Diploma completed in November 1993. Thereafter, the College concentrated in training secondary school teachers. PTD was re-introduced in 2009 since the country needed more primary school teachers due to the introduction of Free Primary Education. Currently, the College offers two programmes; Primary and Secondary Teachers' Diploma. Due to the need to train more Secondary School Teachers, in various subjects offered at the secondary school level, which are currently not offered in the secondary teachers diploma programme, it has necessitated the phasing out of the Primary Teachers' Diploma programme to open up space for these subjects.
